ABOUT THIS DIRECTORY

The Joan Mitchell Foundation is committed to education. After 20 years of providing direct arts education programming to grades K-12 and young adults, the Foundation will spend 2016-2018 focusing on research and piloting innovative educational opportunities for the artist community. We look forward to sharing the new education model with you in 2018.

In the interim, we would like to present you with information on various arts-based organizations and institutions in New York City that offer programming for young people. These programs are diverse and offer opportunities in visual and performing arts for all ages, and also focus on portfolio and career development. The Foundation does not endorse any specific program, but hope that these listed can meet the needs of our families and allow our students to continue building their art practice.

Though not all of these options are free, we encourage you to research the options, contact the organizations, and decide what works best for you. Keep in mind that some do offer scholarship opportunities. Please reach out to the organizations directly: they will be the best able to answer your questions regarding the programs and their requirements. Joan Mitchell Foundation staff are not familiar with the particulars of these programs.

HOW TO SEARCH THE DIRECTORY

In addition to tags showing the type of opportunities offered listed below, entries include icons to denote the ages the opportunities are available to and whether they are free or have a cost (see key below.)

Those organizations with a star ✨ next to their name have reached out and indicated they welcome inquiries from our students and expect to hear from our community of students and parents.
